MISSION STATEMENT
FOR
RELIGION INDEX ONE: PERIODICALS (RIO)
AND RELIGION INDEX TWO: MULTI-AUTHOR WORKS (RIT)

It shall be the purpose of RIO and RIT to index those articles in the field of religion--particularly religion and religious scholarship in the West--which are germane to research in and serve to document that field. The intended audience includes scholars, teachers, students who are engaged in the study of religion and related fields; clergy; other religious leaders; and the general reader in religion.

PREFACE

This issue of RELIGION INDEX ONE: PERIODICALS (RIO®), Volume 21 (1989) has 12,481 author or editor entries which have, in turn, been entered under 30,136 subject headings. Journals indexed include those received in-house through March 26. The 18 new titles in Vol. 21 are identified in the Periodicals Indexed section with the word "new" in square brackets and in a separate listing following the Abbreviations of Periodicals. Since 1975, RIO has included occasional articles of current or retrospective value for studies in religion from professional journals or general publications not regularly indexed. Such titles have been spelled out in full with the exception of the use of Bul, J, R, and Z for bulletin, journal, review, and Zeitschrift respectively and the occasional omission of an article or preposition. A new feature this year is a list on page xxi of these titles with their ISSN numbers for further identification.

An asterisk (*) following the journal citation in the Subject Index indicates the presence of a contents entry in the Author and Editor Index. Subjects assigned to this inclusive entry are not repeated under the separate author entries where unique subjects are assigned. In scan journals a contents entry may suffice without added separate author entries. This application of subjects to contents entries increases the number of articles found per subject search.

The Scripture Index, located in the final section, references specific Bible texts arranged canonically. The articles placed there are critical rather than homiletical and do not necessarily duplicate the broader subject headings in the Bible section of the Subject Index.

The information available in the print copy of RIO in a few cases varies from that of the online versions. Authors of obituaries and news notes are not given separate print listings. Most poems are found online only. Diacritics in the print copy are used in titles, authors' names, and journal titles, but not in subject headings. This accounts for the addition of an "e" to indicate an umlaut over the previous vowel, as in "Kueng" and other names and words used for subject headings.

During the final six months of production, staff consisted of indexers Ric D. Hudgens, Lowell K. Handy, and David B. Rust, and for data input and journal control, Julie Le and Theresa Mendoza. All have, in good humor, continued patterns of dedication to the task and concern for quality work. I express my appreciation to them as well as to earlier staff and to each person listed on the preceding pages.

The United Library of Garrett-Evangelical and Seabury Western Seminaries, Jesuit/Krauss/McCormick Library and the libraries of the University of Chicago, the Catholic Theological Union, and Northwestern University have made their collections available for RIO indexing. Their cooperation facilitates the completeness of the Index's coverage.
